EXPLANATORY NOTES

This Bill seeks to give effect to the United Nations Convention Against Corruption and the OECD Convention on Combating Bribery of Foreign Public Officials in International Business Transactions.

THE UNITED NATIONS CONVENTION AGAINST CORRUPTION

BACKGROUND

In its resolution 55/61 of 4 December 2000, the General Assembly recognised that an effective international legal instrument against corruption, independent of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime (resolution 55/25, annex I) was desirable and decided to establish an ad hoc committee for the negotiation of such an instrument in Vienna at the headquarters of the Centre for International Crime Prevention, Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention. The text of the United Nations Convention against Corruption was negotiated during seven sessions of the Ad Hoc Committee for the Negotiation of the Convention against Corruption, held between 21 January 2002 and 1 October 2003. The Convention approved by the Ad Hoc Committee was adopted by the General Assembly by resolution 58/4 of 31 October 2003.

CONVENTION HIGHLIGHTS

Prevention

Measures such as the establishment of anti-corruption bodies and enhanced transparency in the financing of election campaigns and political parties address both the public and private sectors. Requirements are also established for the prevention of corruption in the judiciary and in public procurement. The Convention calls on countries to actively promote the involvement of non-governmental and community based organisations, as well as other elements of civil society, to raise public awareness of corruption.

Criminalisation

Countries are required to establish criminal and other offences to cover a wide range of acts of corruption. This includes not only basic forms of corruption, such as bribery and the embezzlement of public funds, but also trading in influence and the concealment and “laundering” of the proceeds of corruption.

International cooperation

Countries agreed to cooperate in the fight against corruption, including prevention and investigation activities, and the prosecution of offenders. The Convention also binds countries to render specific forms of mutual legal assistance in gathering and transferring evidence for use in court and to extradite offenders. Countries must also undertake measures to support the tracing, freezing, seizure and confiscation of the proceeds of corruption.

Asset recovery

This is an important issue for many developing countries where high-level corruption has plundered the national wealth, and where resources are badly needed for reconstruction and the rehabilitation of societies under new governments. Measures include the prevention and detection of transfers of illicitly acquired assets, the recovery of property and the return and disposition of assets.

CONVENTION ON COMBATING BRIBERY OF FOREIGN PUBLIC OFFICIALS IN INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS TRANSACTIONS

BACKGROUND

“Bribery in international business transactions raises serious moral and political concerns, undermines good governance and economic development, and distorts international competitive conditions.”. These considerations in 1997 prompted OECD member countries and a number of non-member countries to adopt the Convention on Combating Bribery of Foreign Public Officials in International Business Transactions (henceforth the Convention).

The Convention is an unusual international agreement in that it seeks to coordinate disparate legal systems in order to arrive at a minimum standard with respect to an important form of white-collar crime. It obliges signatory countries- which now include all 30 OECD member countries plus a growing number of non-members-to make the bribery of a foreign public official a crime under their laws.

The Convention is global in scope, with participating countries spread over five continents and accounting for 70 percent of world exports and over 90 percent of foreign direct investment; its provisions are binding on the participants and call for serious review process. The Convention criminalises acts of offering or giving bribes, but not of soliciting or receiving bribes; and it covers only bribery aimed at public officials, not bribery of private sector representatives or political party officials.

MAIN PROVISIONS OF THE ANTI-FOREIGN BRIBERY CONVENTION

The Convention includes the following provisions-

It defines a “foreign public official” as any person holding a legislative, administrative or judicial office of a foreign country, or exercising a public function for a foreign country, including for a public agency or enterprise, and any official or agent of an international organisation (Article 10). A company is deemed “public” if the state can exercise a dominant influence on it through any of the different means available, and the responsible person in such a company is considered to exercise a public function.

It recognises the responsibility of companies that pay bribes or benefit from the bribing (Article 2). As only certain legal systems allow for the criminal responsibility of legal persons such as firms, the Convention does not impose on signatories an obligation to introduce such a concept. However it obliges them to nonetheless establish liability of legal persons in the sense that they are subject to effective, proportionate and dissuasive non-criminal sanctions, including monetary sanctions.

It permits signatory states to apply the legal criteria determining jurisdiction that are traditional to their own systems (Article 4). Civil law countries generally have jurisdiction over “nationals,” even if the offence is committed abroad; common-law countries generally exercise jurisdiction on a purely territorial basis. Non-criminal penalties are to ensure the necessary balance between national treatments.

It ensures that bribes paid to foreign public officials are covered by money laundering legislation in the same way as bribes to national public officials (Article 7). By imposing criminal responsibility on everyone involved in the handling of bribe money, it makes the hiding of such funds much more difficult.

It contains provisions intended to reinforce the preventive function of accounting requirements and of controls on them, in order to avoid the diversion of large sums of money from company accounts for bribery abroad (Article 8). Its proper implementation requires the application of criminal sanctions for grave omissions, such as forgery, falsification and fraud.

It lays down the obligation for signatory states to provide each other prompt and effective legal assistance, for criminal as well as non-criminal investigations and proceedings (Article 9). Signatories should facilitate mutual legal assistance and cannot invoke “bank secrecy” to deny such assistance.

It requires signatories to co-operate in a program of systematic follow-up to monitor and promote the full implementation of the Convention (Article 12).
